DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The house on this farm is a two story, five bay structure covered with wood and aluminum siding. It may be of log construction. The frost elevation is formal with a slightly off center entrance having a broad transon and sidelights around the door. The front surface of the building has wooden siding cut with beveled edges at regular intervals to give the impression of rusticated black construction.

Windows at the first story have nine over six pane sashes while those at the upper level have six over six sashes. A Victorian porch shelters the three central bays and massive late 19th century brackets finish the eaves and gables. Extending to the rear of the house is a one and a half story, three bay all which appears to be of log construction.

Also in the complex is a smoke house, out kitchen and a large dairy barn complex.

This farmhouse would appear to date from the second quarter of the 19th century with late 19th century accretions. The dressed block appearance given by the wooden siding on the main facade of the house is particularly noteworthy. A typical 19th century treatment to refine the appearance of a building struck-joint wooden siding has been discovered on only a few houses in Washington County.
